Labour generals in all-out war

A TURF war between the MLP's newly appointed CEO James Piscopo and secretary general Jason Micallef has sparked new worries of more internecine battles within the already fractured Malta Labour Party. Piscopo was chosen single-handedly by Labour leader Joseph Muscat to take over functions primarily within the remit of the secretary general, but has faced internal opposition to his role from day one. Bickering between the two men has now reached epic proportions, with both party lieutenants bad-mouthing each other in the presence of other officials and soldiers.

Independence at a price

THE price of MaltaToday every Sunday will be 90 Euro cents as from next week. From our inception in November 1999, MaltaToday has striven to offer the best content-driven newspaper on the market. Unlike other media houses it has two characteristic factors that make it stand out from the others.

Primarily, it is commercially independent from big business and it is not linked to any political thought or formation. Secondly, it has only one agenda and that is to transmit the real news and debate the crucial issues.

Thankfully this has been appreciated by more and more readers and that is why Mal-taToday is the fastest growing Sunday newspaper.

Over time and especially in the last years, there has been a concerted effort to gag MaltaToday, to bring it to its knees and to stop it from publishing. Vexatious libel proceedings and direct attacks on the newspaper would have paid dividends, had it not been for the stamina and resilience of our editorial staff. Yet good stories and biting analysis based on fact and not fiction have surely made us more unpopular with the political parties and big business.

Here at MediaToday we are committed to refining our product and more importantly to enter our 10th year with a very clear resolve to give our readers their first read and independent voice on a Sunday.

We may have no agenda, but we know that we set the agenda in the political, social and business arenas. At MediaToday we share a passion together with our sister publications, MaltaToday Midweek, Illum and Business Today, to raise the issues that really matter. This small increase in price will ensure that we can keep our independence without having to compromise our values.

We thank you for your support.
